Griqua festival gains momentum amid Covid-19

SIPHELELE NKETO

THE recent Griqua Traditional Council in Kokstad hosted the annual Griqua Festival following the easing of Covid-19 lockdown restrictions. The Covid-19 outbreak in South Africa brought so many changes to community events, and as a result in the past two years the festival was put on hold due to tight regulations.

The return of the event at the Kokstad Oval Ground saw a number of Griqua communities all the way from Pietermaritzburg, Northern Cape, Matatiele, Cedarville, Umzimkhulu and some other areas attending in their traditional outfits.

The event was aimed at promoting and reviving Griqua traditional cultures and building social cohesion and unity. There was a display of bands playing music and majorettes on the streets of Kokstad followed by cultural activities, games and dances at the main venue. There was also the singing of the Griqua anthem.

The Griqual Traditional Council chairperson Gabriel Marais said that because of Covid-19 the event was put on hold, but now that it has returned he said that its focus was to promote unity to the Griqua community. He said that the event will be a huge one next year and it will include multi-cultural activities.

“For the past eight years hosting the event we have never failed,” he said. The event was also attended by two activists who recently staged a walk from KZN to Gauteng to raise awareness of their culture.

The Harry Gwala District Municipality Mayor Nosisa Jojozi has called for unity in the community and appreciated the fact that the event still holds its purpose and formality in the Kokstad area.

“It makes me happy to see different cultures participating at the event,” she said while the Greater Kokstad Municipality speaker Lwanda Madikizela also expressed appreciation for the event.

“A nation that does not know its roots is a nation that is in despair. Every nation needs to understand its culture. This event clearly shows that the generation of the Griqua nation will know their cultures,” explained Madikizela.
